

Bijlage Cassie's poem

Watch out

Watch out for all these things and all the little in between,

If kids or teens start talking and the parent interrupts, that might be a good time to question what's up?

If the parent is always telling the nurses or docs that their child is in pain,

I know this might sound a little lame, but simply ask the child if they are willing, to pull them aside and truly ask how they are feeling,

If they are hesitant that's okay,

They might not know what to say.

They may be worried that the parent might be mad, instead of them being glad.

Anytime a doc or nurse has a question for the child, make sure to look at the parent to see if they are becoming more wild.

If they try to stop the kid from speaking mid-way, tell the parent to stop and let them listen to what the child has to say!
